

About SEMPHN

South Eastern Melbourne Primary Health Network (SEMPHN) works on behalf of the Australian Government to improve local health care.

We are improving access to existing services, commissioning new services to fill gaps and supporting GPs and other providers to provide better care for the community.

In 2016, we began the transition from direct service provision to a commissioning approach.

What are MHICC services?

Mental Health Integrated Complex Care (MHICC) services offer support for consumers with severe mental illness and complex needs who require coordination of their care over an extended period of time.

MHICC services are highly flexible to match people's individual needs, and can include:

- Clinical nursing services
- Family support and liaison
- Care co-ordination and liaison (clinical and non-clinical)
- Improving access to psychiatrist and psychological care.

MHICC services can be delivered by mental health nurses, clinical psychologists, psychiatrists, and eligible mental health workers, social workers and occupational therapists.

Background to mental health changes

SEMPHN plays an important yet limited part in the primary mental health system.

In line with mental health reform across Australia, SEMPHN released its Mental Health Stepped Care Model in 2016.

The model was informed by:

- Findings of the National Mental Health Commission's review
- Evidence-based best practice
- Consultation with stakeholders including consumers, health professionals and service providers
- Extensive data analysis.

We are using the Stepped Care Model to guide the commissioning of new flexible services in our region for people with mild/moderate and severe/complex mental health needs.

Access to Allied Psychological Services (ATAPS) and the Mental Health Nurse Incentive Program (MHNIP) will be phased out by early 2018.
